GO SLOW.

CONGRESS alone has the power to make war, but if the confusion that seems to exist in that body regarding the advisability of declaring war upon Austria, Turkey and Bulgaria does not clear up within the next few days that body will do well to frankly say that it will be guided entirely in this particular by the chief executive, who is also commander in chief of the army and navy and directly responsible for the conduct of the war.

Some of the volunteer statesmen and strategists have been urging for some time that the United States should be formally as well as constructively at war with Germany's allies. The only reasons this opinion appear to be grounded upon are that then we would not be loathed by the Turkish and Bulgarian legation staffs, which may and may not be centers of spy activity, and we would be at war with the principal foe of our ally Italy, which at best is a purely sentimental view.

These arguments have made such an impression in Congressional circles that yesterday Senator Stone, who was one of the "little band of wilful men" who fought the declaration of war against Germany but continues to be Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations committee, said it "seemed advisable to simplify a situation now anomalous" by a declaration of war against Austria, Turkey and Bulgaria. While Senator James Hamilton Lewis, the Democratic whip in the upper house, expressed similar views, but he added that we should be careful to distinguish between Austrians and Hungarians, Austrians and Bohemians and between Austrians and Poles.

They have the fine art of trimming and straddling down to such a point in the Senate that they may be able to draw up a war resolution that fills the Lewis requirement, but how would that leave us with regard to Germany? President Wilson has been to great pains to make it plain that while we are at war with the government of the German empire we are not at war with the German people. Senator Lewis would have us ignore the Austro-Hungarian government and make war upon a part of the people who live under it whose sole offense against us is that they are subjects of a government that happens to be an ally of a government with which we are at war. The thing is absurd. But that would not prevent this Congress from acting upon the idea if it once got out of control.

If there is a practical military reason for going to war with the allies of the German empire, by all means let us do it at once. But we should not do it for a sentimental reason or because some people have an idea that a few representatives of those countries scattered throughout the nation are a menace to us. There is a very important practical reason why we should go slow in this matter. It would change the status of thousands of subjects of Austria now working in American industrial establishments and it would reduce our already sadly depleted labor supply. This phase of the matter would be felt seriously right here in the Fairmont coal region.

SPECTACULAR PERFORMANCES.

In a war of such vast proportions as the one now going on it is impossible for observers to know all that takes place, but it is safe to say that one of the peculiarities of this struggle is the small quantity of what might be called the spectacular that it has given rise to. The big things, like the defeat of the Germans at the Marne, the landing on the continent and the supplying of a British army that is somewhere between two and three million men in size, Hindenburg's great retreat of last spring, for instance, are in the last degree wonderful accomplishments which will challenge the admiration of posterity, but they were not spectacular; they occupied too much time and covered too much territory to partake of that quality.

It is possible that the East front may have witnessed operations that could be classed as spectacular. Mackensen and Falkenhayn crushing Rumania between the weight of their respective armies operated with a dash which added interest to the drama great as it was. But the East front is a matter about which the peoples who have their chief interest centered upon the West front know little. Only the experts have a clear idea of what happened there.

All these things being true, the march of the French and the British to the support of the Italians, in addition to being a fine military performance, which will be studied in all the military schools of the world as carefully as some of the major operations of the American Civil war are studied, is almost in a class by itself in that it is as spectacular as war ever was when Napoleon, who understood the psychological effect of show to a nicety, was the world's greatest captain. The men arrived in the best of condition," said the reporter who saw them on Sunday. "They were eager to hear how the fight was going and anxious to get forward." It has the old time ring and it must have given the sorely pressed Italian troops the old time thrill.

The best American experts were of the opinion last week that if the Italians could hold out on the Piave line until the promised French and British reinforcements arrived it would mean the failure of the Austro-German campaign. It was also believed that if the new troops were in sufficient strength and well enough equipped with artillery the offensive might pass to the Italian side with disastrous results for the Teutonic forces. We do not yet know how large the Franco-British column is, but we are warranted in assuming that it is composed of the best kind of troops and that it will give a good account of itself.

Soldiers of the United States upon whom the French have conferred war crosses have been told that they may keep them, but that they must not wear them. In this the policies of the War and Navy departments are squarely at opposition, which is another reason why there should be an early Congressional action upon the subject. The constitution provides that these decorations may be accepted with the consent of Congress, and in the history of the country that consent has been granted on a few occasions. If America is to have a decoration of its own for gallantry in this war it might be expedient to keep up the constitutional bar against the acceptance of favors from kings, princes and foreign states, but if it is not, the men who have been given French crosses or who will be given them in the future, should have full permission to wear them.

Washington correspondents continue to talk about the possibility of government operation of railroads if the general pooling system which has just been adopted proves to be a failure. What on earth could the government do that the railroad vice presidents who are to be in charge of the new arrangement can not also do in the way of getting traffic over the roads?

Charleston's Rotary club has sent a letter of protest against the action of Governor McCall in releasing the negro Johnson who is wanted in this state to stand trial on a criminal charge to each of the six Rotary clubs in Massachusetts, and eventually the same letter will be sent to every one of the 300 Rotary clubs in the country. Massachusetts started something without waiting to find out whether it could be finished in this Johnson matter, and the end of the incident is by no means in sight.

State department officials at Washington at Washington say they have received word that the authorities in control of Petrograd are in wireless communication with those in control in Berlin. The news in that piece of information probably lies in the fact that heretofore communications between Petrograd and Berlin went by the underground route.

In the sudden death of Festus Downs, which occurred at his home yesterday evening the city and county lose a citizen who has been prominent in business and public life for many years. Mr. Downs believed in Marion county and the success which he attained here is an inspiring example of what may be done by steady adherence to a sane business ideal.

RUFF STUFF

Wonder if this French idea of conferring crosses for conspicuous gallantry would make the Fairmont cops pinch the drivers of a few of the cars belonging to prominent citizens when they forget that there are such things as traffic laws?

Costs one year in the pen to lie to the circuit court.

And it's beginning to play out in the police court too.

If Uncle Sam takes over the railroads some local politicians with a great hankering for a public job will be able to say that they have landed.

Bert Humphreys got six months.

Which is pretty soft considering how much ammunition he made the deputies shoot away.

By the way, does any one know whether Deputy Bobbie found that gun he lost Saturday?

A professor of chemistry has been named director of the state thrift campaign.

Well, all around chemists are excited with microscopes.

And after paying present prices it will take a pretty good glass to find anything with which to practice thrift.

At that they say the turkey bird can be bought for Thanksgiving dinner at a fair price.

And pumpkin for pies it not yet on the impossible list.

So if there is a little bit of sugar in the house a fair feast can be arranged even as matters stand.

Nineteen girls living at the Y. M. C. A. in Youngstown the other day were poisoned by the milk used in the cooking.

Gosh, it takes a fortune to buy milk and then one can not be sure it is safe when it is bought.

Bet the Italians were glad to see those French and British lads when they arrived after their long march.

But think how the Austro-Germans must have felt about it.

This is one time when the contention cannot be made that the Entente acted too late.

Of course they are getting in pretty late at that, but that probably is the fault of the Italian high command.

WASHINGTON NEWS GOSSIP

By CHARLES BROOKS SMITH.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 27.—That as good corn can be grown in the soil of Potomac Park as is grown in the Iowa corn belt is the statement of an expert from there who gave the 400 acres of corn planted and raised by the Boy Scouts of Washington the once over before it was harvested. That job has just been completed by the youngsters and they gathered in 10,000 bushels of such extraordinarily fine corn that dealers vied with each other to buy it. Next year, it wouldn't surprise anyone to see a number of the beautiful parks of the Capital suddenly loom up as fields of waving and tasseled maize.

The success of the Eng 64 cavalry

The picture shows the fine looking American soldier on crutches. This is the first boy from this county wounded in the foreign or allied war, so far as known. The many friends of the young man will be pleased to know that he is at least able to go about on crutches. Mr. Moran has two other sons in the ranks at different places, the youngest of the three enlisting in July last at the age of 17 years.

Every few days some new information comes to hand that quickens the interest of the people in the Titanic struggle now in progress in Europe, says the Spencer Times-Record which also says it has learned that Clyde Rynnion, a son of the late Andrew Rynnion, is a Captain in the French Army. While all the particulars are not known, it is supposed that Captain Rynnion made his way to France and enlisted early in the war. He is a cousin of Edward Rynnion, of this city, and was born here. His parents moved to Kansas several years ago and the father has since died there. The mother and a brother, Pleasant Rynnion, reside at Winfield, Kansas.

For the following rather interesting story credit is due the Jackson Herald: "Court was in session, more than two hundred spectators were present Thursday afternoon, to hear the evidence in the case of the State vs. Silas Casto. Mr. Casto was indicted last April on the charge of bringing 'booze' into the state unlawfully. Attorney John T. Simms, of the Tax Commissioner's office, assisted Prosecuting Attorney Boggers in prosecuting the case, while Attorney J. L. Wolfe was employed by the defense. The jury had been impaneled, statements of the case were presented and the first witness had been called to the chair. The six quarts and one pint of whiskey and three quarts of alcohol, alleged to have been taken from the defendant, were placed on exhibition. The attorney for the defense was asked to admit that a certain bottle contained whiskey. He refused to make such admission for the benefit of the state. Proof was necessary. The bottle was handed the witness, who upon the request of the attorney, withdrew the cork, pressed the bottle to his lips and said, 'It's whiskey.' The bottle was then handed by the lawyer to the jurymen who sat nearest. The jurymen, after sampling the 'goods' passed it to the next who likewise acted as though the 'beverage' tasted good. At this instance Judge O'Brien noted the state for his opposition to the liquor traffic called out at the top of his voice, 'Don't give that jury whiskey.' But by this time the third jurymen knew by actual knowledge that the bottle contained whiskey. Judge O'Brien was then standing and the sheriff, following the instructions of the Judge, had possession of the bottle. Some of the other members of the jury are said to have thrown away their tobacco, anticipating a drink of the 'booze.' But at the rate the contents of the quart was disappearing one quart would not have been sufficient for the twelve men. The state failed in the case, the defendant showing that the goods were properly labeled."

In General Byng's command of the 11th denburg line very quickly attracted the minds of the military experts at the War department to the question of cavalry for Pershing's forces, and resulted in prompt action being taken in getting together a cavalry division to send to France as soon as that can be done. Already, work on getting up a cavalry division of 12,000 men and mounts has commenced. That will be done with all possible speed and they will be transported just as soon as they can be gotten ready and shipping provided. Only once before in the war has cavalry been used, then only on a small scale, and the opinion had grown widely in both military and civilian circles that the cavalry had outgrown its usefulness as a result of the new methods and system of warfare. Gen. Byng's surprise attack and splendid victory disclosed quite the contrary to be true.

The third officers' training camp will start January 5th and last until April 5th. It will be open only to enlisted men of the regular army, the National Guard, the National Army, and to the graduates and undergraduates of certain colleges, universities and military schools specified by the War department. Charles E. Tustin, of Middlebourne, Bat. A, 314, F. A., stationed at Camp Lee, upon request of Congressman Woodward, has been given leave to attend the regimental training school so that he may qualify for appointment to the third officers' training camp. Lyle D. Vincent, of St. Marys, member of the 17th field artillery, now stationed at Camp Robinson, Wis., has also been recommended by Mr. Woodward for admission to that camp.

The "sausage suit" for men is coming back. This is not a flippant fashion comment; it is a commentary on the grim tragedy of war that those who stay at home must suffer too. Not only are civilian clothes to be shorn of their wool to the extent of thirty or forty per cent, but the tailors, by agreement with the government, are to clip and snip wherever possible to save cloth. The war style, as effected by an agreement between the manufacturers of woolen cloth and the war industries board of the Council of National Defense, and with the tailors through the manufacturers, will give little latitude for style variations. Narrowness is the war vogue; narrow trousers, narrow lapels, narrow coats, even to the pockets, and narrow buttons to save buttons and lots of button holes to save cloth. The silhouette is to be

Ge. Rigour, audacious creations in straight lines will be shown. Every at men's patriotism will be under suspicion. Any slack in the fit of a suit will mark the slack. The present trouser mode leaves so little room for economy that some designers, it is understood, are working on a trouser that will button down the side, all the way down. Waistcoats, probably will be entirely taboo, and coats take their place entirely by the evolving of a masculine blouse, though not so daring as its feminine prototype.

When Gen. John Barleycorn was forced to make a strategic retreat from the District of Columbia to the Baltimore line, there was a small part of his force left holding the high ground in Prince George county, Md., that held out against all pressure. But after 24 hours of fighting on that salient, Gen. Barleycorn was compelled to withdraw there and straighten out his line, which may be traced along the boundaries of the Monumental City, if you have a map handy. Discarding the metaphor, it is meant to be said that the courts have declared the dry law of Prince George county as good as old wheat in the mill and in harmony and accord with Maryland's constitution. Thus, the last remaining oasis in the dreary stretch of desert intervening between Washington and Baltimore has been swallowed up by the sand storms. Gen. Barleycorn's army is now, it may be said, bottled-up-in-bomb in Baltimore. For, all around and about him it is as dry as a covered bridge.
